

THOUGHTS ON STEPS 6 & 7

I'm torn. Defects and shortcomings. Were they being just creative in their choice of words, or do they really have somewhat different meanings?

Working the Steps as suggested by the Big Book you do your 5th Step, which, in short, is reading aloud the inventory you wrote in the 4th Step to someone — usually a sponsor, but that's not a requirement — you go off by yourself for an hour (or so) and sit quietly reflecting on the first five Steps. You ask yourself if you've really done them to the best of your ability.

Then you look over the inventory where your part in things is made clear, and pretty much do the 6th and the 7th Step on your own right there. (For most of us that includes saying the 7th Step Prayer, pg. 76 in the book "Alcoholics Anonymous", the Big Book of AA). Hopefully your sponsor has walked you through this so you're not sitting there with your inventory in one hand and your Big Book in the other, a little drained and overwhelmed by the whole thing and trying to figure it all out on your own.

Ok, that's all the background you need.

Ok, so there you are, diligently working from the Big Book, ready to embrace two of the Steps that, if you've been listening to people share about them in meetings, are an ongoing, lifetime kind of challenge.

And you know what the Big Book gives you? Not counting the prayer itself, the Big Book, on pg. 76, gives me 79 words to guide me in the 6th and 7th Step. That's it. A quick pop quiz asking if I'm ready to have my defects removed, and then a prayer, and boom, done.

79 words! Come on! They're the right 79 words of course — not everything needs a big long explanation.

But these are the Steps that in some ways form the basis of a powerful, pragmatic practice of spiritual principle.

I need a fuller explanation when I'm trying to deal with my defects of character, and my shortcomings, day in day out. Thank God for the 12 & 12 ("Twelve Steps and Twelve Traditions" another examination of AA's 12 Steps, written about 13 years after the Big Book was published. Give or take.)

Read them for yourself, but basically the 6th Step in the 12 & 12 speaks much to the idea that, now that I have used spiritual principles to address my drinking, can I use them on other problems in myself? ("A resounding Yes!" is what's offered as the answer to that.)

And the 7th, surprisingly, focuses a lot on the humility aspect of the Step. I say surprisingly only because I always want to get into the part where I'm the broken, screwed up mess, and skip right over the humble part, which, frankly, sounds boring. Humility, as a concept, does not make my heart beat faster or my palms sweat. Plus, if an alcoholic is looking at what a mess he is. He's really in essence focused on himself — and what alcoholic doesn't love to focus on himself?

I get that I am involving God in this process, identifying where I need to change and asking God (as I understand God) to help with the changing process... but here's where I'm torn.

Is there a difference between 'defects of character' and 'shortcomings'?

For years I thought that really, they were just trying not to be repetitive when they wrote the Steps out. But then over time I came to look at it from another perspective.

I think a 'defect of character' has a lot to do with my Will, and a shortcoming has a lot to do with my Nature. Or, to put it another way, if I'm driving down the road and I get a flat tire, the flat tire is a shortcoming, and insisting I drive on it, rather than pull over and change it, is a defect of character.

I need God's help in addressing both of those things, but I'm very much an active participant in the one, and more a humble petitioner in the other.

Either way, my big lightbulb moment about this petition to God is that it is easy to ask for a different result. But really what I might be better served to ask is for help not with having a different result, but in having a different process. Or being willing to have a different process. After all, back in the 3rd Step I signed on to be the worker, and God is the boss. I do the work, not God.

Either way, although I am not a passive participant in the process, we do the work, not God, remember? For me it's not about just saying the prayer and then sitting back, not doing a damn thing on my own to try and change. God will remove, in God's time, ultimately only the things that are in the way of my being of service to others — the rest of my defects are merely fodder for God to work through for whatever mysterious, hilarious purpose God chooses.

The good news is that sometimes God very often works through my character assets rather than my character defects... to which God has quite clearly replied.
